

Welcome to the magical world of Broadway! Whether you're a newbie or a seasoned show-goer, theater manners are the secret sauce to ensuring a magical time for all. Here's your backstage pass to some must-know guidelines:

1. Show Up Fashionably Early: Broadway shows kick off without a minute to spare, so snag your seat before the lights dim. Plan to arrive 15-30 minutes in advance to settle in smoothly. If you're fashionably late, you might have to wait for a scene break to sneak in.

2. Hush Your Gadgets: Before the curtain rises, silence your phone and any other electronics. Buzzing and glowing screens can steal the spotlight and be risky for the performers. Embrace the moment and resist the urge to sneak a peek at your messages or social media!

3. Spread the Respect: This show is a group effort. Keep chit-chats brief and whispered if needed. Say no to noisy candy wrappers, loud snacking, or slurping. Show the performers some love by giving them your undivided attention.

4. Clap with Gusto: Pump up the energy by clapping at the right moments – after a song, scene, or standout performance. Standing ovations are generally reserved for the end of the show, but feel free to cheer and clap throughout to show your love. The actors on stage thrive on your vibes!

5. Stick Around 'Til the Curtain Call: Even if you're itching to hit the exits, it's courteous to stay put until the curtain call is complete and the house lights come up. The cast has poured their hearts into entertaining you, so staying till the end is a tip-top way to show your gratitude.

By rocking these simple guidelines, you'll help create a stellar and joy-filled theater experience for all. Break a leg and enjoy the show!
